

Yes, you can.

Before you even question your ability to do it, let me tell you a little story.

According to the laws of aerodynamics, the bumblebee should not be able to fly.

Their bodies are too large and their wingspan it's too short.

Their proportions don't make sense at all.

Scientists have studied them for centuries. The data on paper confirms that bumblebees should not be able to fly... and yet, the bumblebee flies.

So, the question is...

Why?

And the answer is pretty simple.

The bumblebee doesn't live by the expectations and calculations of the observer, it lives by the design of its creator.

The bumblebee never read the research paper, it didn't get the memo that said they couldn't fly.

It never internalized the limitations.

The question for you is ...

Have you been living under someone else's data?

Think about your environment and the people around you. Think about what they say about you or how they “see” you. Most importantly, pay attention to how do they see the world

Those observers might say things like,

“Well, they don't have what it takes”,

“They don't know how to do it”,

“They were not born for it”,

“They don't have the resources”

Now, let me tell a little story about you...

You hold the key.

You have the opportunity to identify those observers and remove their data.

You decide to ignore the observers and start living your life, and most importantly you stop measuring the size of your winds, you decide that the laws of limitations don't apply to you...

You acknowledge that you can do it. You start using your own data.

One little hint:

Your brain makes a hypothesis about yourself (they are not true) and then it looks for information to confirm it.

One big tip:

Start your day knowing that no calculations can cancel it, no diagnosis can override it,
no statistics can silence it, no observer opinion matters.

You are finally listening to that inner voice saying...

"Yes, you can".
